Starving Musicians

The fair board hired three young men from California as entertainment and to stroll around the grounds and stop and play music. The music would always draw a crowd and it helped our display to draw a bigger crowd. The band consisted of stand up bass, guitar and a horn player. They had a red wagon they hauled their bass and a small battery amp in. This made it easier to get around the fair grounds.

My husband, Johnny Parker, was a musician and immediately got acquainted with the "boys" so the "boys" stopped by frequently. They were funny and with great personalities and everyone enjoyed having them around. They were camping in the fair R.V. area and sleeping in their car and a small tent. They seem to stay around a lot, especially at meal time. That was alright as we were used to feeding a lot of people

Donna Everett and I always had a big pot of soup on the wood cook stove and cooked enough food each day to feed our group and always cooked extra as we never knew who would stop by and stay and have dinner with us.

On the third day of the fair, the fair manager came and talked with me and explained that the "boys" had enough gas money to get here from California and had ten dollars between them to survive on for the ten day fair and money don't go far when you buy fair food. Could they please come and eat with us.

The "motherly" instinct kicked in with Donna and I and we needed to see that those boys had plenty to eat. We could put more water in the gravy and add a few more beans to the pot. Everyone helped out with bringing milk, potatoes, and veggies. Betty Rabur's two daughters kept us supplied with all kinds of wonderful home made cookies.

We made it through the ten day of the fair and the boys never missed a meal. I don't know what they weighed when they got here but they looked pretty healthy when they left.
